(57) ABSTRACT

A system for collecting and transferring electronic information includes one or more servers, having one or more centralized databases for storing or retrieving the data, connected to a network, one or more computing devices connected to the servers via the network for retrieving the data from the centralized databases, and a plurality of biometric devices connected to the servers via the network, located at different locations. Each biometric device comprises a system for identifying users based on biometric data of the users, a system for storing the biometric data and activity information of the users, and a system for sending the biometric data and activity information to the servers, in communication with the servers in real time via the network.
